Cracker Stalls Violating Safety Norms Won't Get Permission: Sanath Nagar Fire Officer

"Hyderabad Correspondent, November 3 (Indian Chronicle): Allegations of a syndicate controlling a major share of the seasonal fireworks trade in Sanath Nagar have raised concerns over stall allocation, rental collections and fire safety, with more than 40 temporary structures reportedly planned across busy stretches of the locality."Several tin-roofed sheds are being erected along the stretch from Erragadda Main Road towards Sanath Nagar bus stop and in two lanes adjoining the industrial area. Additional structures are also coming up alongside GHMC-built sheds on the main road. The growing number of closely spaced stalls has raised concerns over fire safety, pedestrian movement and access along these busy stretches."According to allegations, two individuals are controlling a major share of the fireworks stalls in the area. One of them is a builder involved in construction activities who also takes up the fireworks business during the Diwali season. The other individual is also alleged to be playing a key role in managing the seasonal trade. The two are allegedly involved in constructing temporary sheds and renting them out to other traders for operating fireworks stalls, with a major share of the business reportedly remaining under their control. There are also allegations that traders are being charged amounts ranging from Rs 1 lakh to Rs 5 lakh, depending on the size and location of the stalls. The alleged arrangement has raised questions over the manner in which stalls are being set up and allocated, as well as the role of those controlling the temporary structures."When contacted, Sanath Nagar Fire Officer Purna Kumar said his department had received applications seeking permission to operate fireworks stalls within his jurisdiction. Some locations had already been inspected and permissions granted after verification. He said every proposed stall would be inspected to ensure compliance with prescribed fire safety requirements before permission was considered."Purna Kumar said permissions are generally granted for 14 days, although some applicants seek approval for shorter periods of three or four days, or around 10 days. More applications were still being received, and the department would inspect every stall before taking a decision on granting permission."Emphasising that public safety would remain the department's foremost priority, the fire officer categorically stated that stalls violating prescribed rules and safety regulations would not be granted permission under any circumstances. He said commercial activity would not be allowed to compromise fire safety or put the public at risk. He further said fire personnel would conduct regular inspections throughout the permitted period, including the day after Diwali. Any stall found violating safety regulations would be ordered to close immediately."With more than 40 temporary stalls reportedly planned in the locality, the focus is now on the implementation of fire safety norms and the monitoring of stall arrangements. Ensuring that temporary structures do not obstruct pedestrian movement or expose people to fire hazards will be crucial during the festive season.

A moment of anger put one woman's life at risk and sent another behind bars.

““Bhadradri Kothagudem, November 03, Indian Chronicle.““Anger may last only a moment, but the decisions made in that moment can haunt people for the rest of their lives. A tragic incident in Manuguru, Bhadradri Kothagudem Dist stands as a painful reminder of this truth. A minor argument between two women over just ?80 on an RTC bus escalated into a physical scuffle. One of them was RTC conductor Pravalika, while the other was a homemaker and mother of two children. As the verbal exchange intensified and the two women became involved in a physical altercation, conductor Pravalika lost her balance and fell to the ground. During the incident, the bus wheels ran over her legs, leaving her seriously injured. Her ongoing struggle for life has deeply distressed everyone. Meanwhile, the homemaker involved in the incident has been sent to jail. Just think for a moment, where did a dispute that began over a mere ?80 lead? While one woman is fighting for her life in a hospital bed, another woman is behind prison walls, separated from her children. Today, tears and anguish have become the only reality for both families.““? When reason loses to anger, tragedy is all that remains.““Money can be earned again if it is lost. If we say something hurtful, we can apologize. But if someone's life is put in danger, can things ever be restored to the way they were before? Remaining silent for a minute when anger takes over is not a sign of weakness. It is a powerful act of self-control that can protect both our lives and the lives of others. Whether on buses, on roads, or in everyday life, arguments over minor issues, stubbornness, and resorting to physical violence are increasingly leading to tragedies like this.““? A humble appeal to society.““A dispute that began over ?80 has put one woman's health and another woman's freedom at stake. The law will determine who was right and who was wrong in this incident. However, there is one lesson that we must all learn. 'What matters is not winning an argument, but preserving life. What we must give up is not our self-respect, but our momentary anger!' We must think carefully about how a single word we speak or a single action we take can affect another person's life. Whenever a dispute arises, we should exercise restraint. If necessary, we should walk away and seek a lawful resolution to the problem. Because, 'If you allow anger to win over ?80, you may end up losing to tears for the rest of your life!'. Control your momentary anger. Value humanity. Protect your life and the lives of others.
